

2017-11-29 | press release | International | energy supply

Economic activity and electricity use is changing around the world

Growth in economic activity (measured as gross domestic product) has tended historically to be coupled with increases in electricity use as populations grow and generate more goods and services. However, more recently this relationship has been decoupling in many countries.

Source: U.S. Energy Information Administration

Read more: <https://www.eia.gov/todayinenergy/detail.php?id=33812&src=email>